Excerpt: .account between the parties upon which the court could frame a decree without being burdened with the time-consuming and purely clerical work of disentangling the figures of confused accounts; but we are convinced that this litigation has been carried far enough, and that it should be brought to an end, and for this reason we have undertaken the task of unraveling the accounts in evidence, and have arrived, from the evidence, though incomplete in itself, at what we deem to be an equitable adjustment of the respective rights of the parties. From that adjustment we find that the amount decreed by the court below was excessive, being much greater than the complainant, under the proofs, was fairly entitled to receive. The principles of law by which we have been governed in adjusting the amount to be decreed to the complainant are as follows: (1) Under...
