Preventive Services Task Force (USPSTF) recommendation on screening women for intimate partner violence (IPV) and elderly and vulnerable adults for abuse and neglect. The USPSTF defines screening as obtaining information about abuse from individuals in health care settings who do not have complaints or obvious signs of abuse, such as physical injuries. In 2004, based on results of a previous review, the USPSTF found insufficient evidence to recommend for or against routine screening of women for IPV or of older adults or their caregivers for elder abuse. The USPSTF could not determine the balance between the benefits and harms of screening because of the lack of critical evidence, particularly the lack of trials of the effectiveness of screening in health care settings and the effectiveness of interventions to reduce harm from abuse. The USPSTF reviewed several existing screening instruments that demonstrated adequate internal consistency and were validated with longer instruments. However, none were evaluated against measurable violence or health outcomes. Also, despite reviewing an extensive literature on IPV, few studies provided data...
